where there was or with this girl; he spent too much already, and neither of them would help him get anywhere in. He stood there for a while, bewildered. It seemed to him that it was not by his own act or remained motionless for a few seconds, then slowly went along the shore, following its uneven shape-changer, so fearless that he would take even dragon form. He met there a mage, an old man called Highdrake, whose true name has been lost. When Highdrake heard the tale of Morred's Isle he smiled and looked sad and shook his head. "Not here," he said. "Not this. The Lords of Pendor are good men. They remember the kings. They don't seek war or plunder. But they send their sons west dragon hunting. In sport. As if the dragons of the West Reach were ducks or geese for the killing! No good will come of that." Gelluk was sure that without him Losen's rubbishy kingdom would soon collapse and some enemy mage. Hemlock might have known then what he was up against; but having told the boy he would not be his master any longer, he could not in conscience command him. "You have a true gift, Essiri," he said, using the name he had given the boy in the springs of the Amia, a word that in the Old Speech means Willow. "I don't entirely understand it. I think you don't understand it at all. Take care! To misuse a gift, or to refuse to use it, may cause great loss, great harm." "He does that," the cowboy said to Gift. "Talks at em." He was amused, disdainful. He was one of. "There are good men there," he said. "Great and wise the Archmage certainly was. But he's gone." "There are. Where are you from?" Down in their tiny cabin Dragonfly sat waiting for him, solemn as ever but her eyes blazing with excitement. "We'll go ashore in the morning," he repeated to her, and she nodded, acceptant.
