"Like the Library of the Kings," said Crow, dreaming of lost glories. quicksilver, the fire must be built not of mere wood but of human corpses. Rereading and pondering on Gont, he knew that. But he was tired of teaching, and didn't want another apprentice underfoot. "young'un," said a broad, strong man with a furrowed face, "but you can nod your head well enough. He strode from the house, turned, and set a fire spell on it so that it burst into flames, thatch himself again, but sick as a dog, as who could blame him, and all the while there was this light. Money was a problem. The girl thought, of course, that he as a great wizard would snap his fingers and waft them over the sea in a magic boat flying before the magewind. But when he told her they'd have to hire passage on a ship, she said simply, "I have the cheese money." "You didn't set a price?" Crow cocked his head. salt destroyer," says the poem. He got up in the icy morning while they still slept rolled in their blankets. He knew where the cattle were nearby, and went to them. The sickness was very familiar to him now. He felt it in his hands as a burning, and a queasiness if it was much advanced. Approaching one steer that was lying down, he found himself dizzy and retching. He came no closer, but said words that might ease the dying, and went on. He said nothing. She squatted down to find out what was in the basket. "Peaches!" she said, and. He knelt down and took her hands, looking into her face. Golden owned the mill that cut the oak boards for the ships they built in Havnor South Port and Havnor Great Port; he owned the biggest chestnut groves; he owned the carts and hired the carters that carried the timber and the chestnuts over the hills to be sold. He did very well from trees, and when his son was born, the mother said, "We could call him Chestnut, or Oak, maybe?" But the father said, "Diamond," diamond being in his estimation the one thing more precious than gold. series of rooms with grotesque -- because moving, even active -- statues; a kind of wide street. was nothing to fear. On his rides, he sometimes passed an old house on a hill among great oaks. When he turned off the village lane up the hill, a pack of scrawny, evil-mouthed dogs came pelting and bellowing down at him. The mare was afraid of dogs and liable to buck and bolt, so he kept his distance. But he had an eye for beauty, and liked to look at the old house dreaming away in the dappled light of the early summer afternoons. up the street with him. "Our problem is with men," Veil said, "if you'll forgive me, dear brother. Men are of more account. It was Havnor, his land, where his people were, whether alive or dead he did not know; where Anieb lay in her grave, up there on the mountain. He had never been back, never come this close. It had been how long? Sixteen years, seventeen years. Nobody would know him, nobody would remember the boy Otter, except Otter's mother and father and sister, if they were still alive. And surely there were people of the Hand in the Great Port. Though he had not known of them as a boy, he should know them now. his hand, and rule with his guidance, as Morred ruled. I won't put a semblance-spell on you till we're on Roke Island." "I'll be in the Grove," she said. "And my heart with you, my dark otter, my white tern, my love, Medra." "I am Anieb," she whispered..She looked at him. She could not speak. She stood up and after a moment walked out of the stableyard, off across the hill, on the path that went around it halfway up. One of the dogs, her favorite, a big, ugly, heavy-headed hound, followed her. She stopped on the slope above the marshy spring where Rose had named her ten years ago. She stood there; the dog sat down beside her and looked up at her face. But his father raged at him for his "shortcuts," even struck him once on the mouth. Medra did not answer at once. "Chance," he said at last, "favoring long desire. Not art. Not knowledge. I think I've come to the place I sought, but I don't know. I think you may be the people they told me of, but I don't know. I think the trees I saw from the hill hold some great mystery, but I don't know. I only know that since I set foot on that hill I've been as I was when I was a child and first heard The Deed of Enlad sung. I am lost among wonders." Peace.
