When Berry went out again, the woman came closer and said, resolute, in a low voice, "There's not much worth much in my life," she said, gazing down at the pavement. "All I know how." "I will," said Ivory, with a wink at Dragonfly. She, well disguised in dirt and a farmhand's old smock and leggings and a loathsome felt hat, did not wink back. She played her part even while they sat side by side dangling their legs over the tailgate, with six great halftuns of wine jolting between them and the drowsy carter, and the drowsy summer hills and fields slipping slowly, slowly past. Ivory tried to tease her, but she only shook her head. Maybe she was scared by this wild scheme, now she was embarked on it. There was no telling. She was solemnly, heavily silent. I could be very bored by this woman, Ivory thought, if once I'd had her underneath me. The belief that a wizard must be celibate was unquestioned for so many centuries that it probably came to be a psychological fact.
